

From: M
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 12/11/01 2:07pm
Subject: Simple Statements of Fact

Simple Statements of Fact

Not your area but, anyone who was serious about internet security would start by forbidding Microsoft software from connecting to the internet.

Not within your power I know but, blocking Microsoft from selling operating systems would probably be the simplest way to promote a strong, competitive computer industry. Call it a good deed, improving the computer user's experience would be reason enough to do so. They simply aren't good at OSes.

Now we get to you, Microsoft has a long, well-established history of abusing their monopolistic position and have shown neither remorse nor any intent to correct their future conduct.

Question: Are the DOJ and other plaintiffs going to do anything about that or just cave in to the plutocratic interests of Dubya and other conservative socialists?

-M